 Element "j.length" undefined.	HTML Validation	6 pages
This happens when the version of HTML used on this page doesn't support an element with this name. This can happen if the element is misspelled, is uppercase or mixed case in XHTML, or isn't supported by some HTML versions. For example, HTML 4 DOCTYPEs don't allow HTML 5 element and Strict DOCTYPEs don't allow stylistic elements and frames which were present in earlier versions of HTML.

 An unknown entity has been used. This often happens when &param=value is used instead of &amp;param=value in URL query strings.  In HTML the ampersand character (&) is reserved for marking character entities so you should never use raw ampersands in HTML - including ampersands inside URLs. Any URL that uses an ampersand should look like: `file.php?var1=val1&amp;var2=val2`	HTML Validation Ampersand Problem	6 pages
